Back to School K-5

But this year will be different from many years in the past. This year, concerns about the coronavirus is causing a different way of thinking about going back to school that must be considered.

How do schools prepare for those who will be attending or working in these environments? There are plenty of recommendations online from government agencies to blogs. The CDC offers considerations for ways in which schools can help protect students, teachers, administrators, and staff to slow the spread of COVID-19.

The decisions to either have virtual only, part-time plus virtual, or full-time campus classes will be determined by the school districts with state and local health officials and the affected families.

This fall communities, families, and students in the US will all be preparing to go back to school.

This guide will help with recommendations for visual communications from Visual Workplace, Inc. for school campuses. This guide is broken down by key areas on campuses with recommendations to signs, posters, banners, floor decals and signs, A-frame guides and floor tape to help schools direct and remind those in the building of best practices including social distancing, washing hands, and several other safety and hygiene requirements.

CDC recommends promoting behaviors to help reduce the spread of COVID-19: Staying home when appropriate, hand hygiene and respiratory etiquette, cloth face coverings, adequate supplies, and signs and messages.
